

DAY 00 INTAKE

In your words.

SEVEN SECTIONS · RETURN TO ANY SECTION · SLOPPY IS FINE

INVENTORY

Before anything else, a read of what's already running. You've built a real stack — tools, contexts, rhythms — and this section maps it before we map the gaps.

TOOLS & SURFACES

Walk me through the tools you're running day-to-day — Claude, Plaud, Obsidian, anything else you'd miss if it disappeared. Not an exhaustive list; just the ones that are actually in the rotation.

CONTEXT STACK

You mentioned a 14-file Claude stack. What's in there — rough categories is fine. And if there's a voice OS or system prompt you're running alongside it, describe that too.

RECURRING RITUALS

What does a standard client week look like operationally? Not the coaching itself — the work that runs the week. Prep, documentation, follow-through, whatever the rhythm is.

Where does Claude actually show up in your work right now? What are you asking it? Where does it do the job, and where does it fall short?

SHARP PAINS

What's actually broken this week. Not chronic background noise — the specific friction you've run into recently enough to still be annoyed about it.

CURRENT-WEEK FRICTION

What has slowed you down or stopped you cold in the last five working days? Name it as specifically as you can.

WHERE IT COSTS YOU MOST

Of the friction you just named, which one costs you the most — time, attention, client quality, or something else?

WHAT YOU'VE ALREADY TRIED

Have you already tried to fix it? What happened?

THE ONE THAT KEEPS COMING BACK

Is there a problem you've solved more than twice that showed up again?
Describe it.

CHRONIC BLEEDS

Slow leaks. The stuff you've stopped noticing because it's always been there — but it's still costing you something every week.

INVISIBLE FRICTION

What work do you do manually every single time, without questioning it?

WHERE CONTEXT DROPS

Where do you lose the thread between sessions — between a recording and a document, between a client conversation and the follow-up, between your own thinking and what you can actually find later?

THE SLOW TAX

What takes you longer than it should? Not because of a one-time problem — because of how the work is currently structured.

WHAT YOU DO INSTEAD OF THE REAL WORK

When you sit down to do focused work, what do you end up doing instead? Where does the time actually go before you get to the thing that matters?

PATTERNS

Not the unique situations — the ones that repeat. Work shapes that show up more than three times a week, enough that you’ve developed a feel for how they go.

REPEATING WORK SHAPES

What types of work do you find yourself doing over and over — same basic shape, even if the content changes? Think about the last two weeks.

SIGNATURE MOVES

Is there a way you approach a specific kind of problem that you'd describe as distinctly yours — a read, a reframe, an order of operations that works for you and wouldn't work the same way for someone else?

ROLES YOU OCCUPY

Beyond 'executive coach' — what roles do you actually occupy in a given client week? Strategist, analyst, sounding board, writer, something else?

WHERE THE SAME DECISION KEEPS COMING UP

What's a judgment call you make repeatedly? Not a hard decision — a well-worn one. The kind where you already know the answer before you've finished thinking through it.

WHAT YOU'D EXPLAIN DIFFERENTLY

If you were describing your approach to a brand-new client, what's the one thing you'd say that you don't bother explaining to clients who've been with you for a while?

TRIGGERS

Patterns with a clear on-ramp. A specific condition arrives, and a specific sequence of work begins. Describe the condition — not what tool should handle it.

STABLE INPUTS

What kinds of events or arrivals reliably kick off a defined sequence of work? A new client decision, a recording that just synced, an email that requires a specific type of response?

PREDICTABLE OUTPUTS

After that sequence runs, what does the result look like? A document, an email, an updated file, a follow-up scheduled?

CONDITIONS YOU WAIT FOR

Are there things you hold in your head until a specific condition is met — and when that condition arrives, you act? Describe the condition and what it releases.

Where in your current workflow do you act as the relay — passing something from one place to another, doing nothing except the move itself?

MEMORY

What you store, where it lives, and whether you can find it when you need it. The gap between what you've captured and what you can actually retrieve is usually the real problem.

WHERE YOU STORE THINGS

Where does information about your clients and your practice actually live right now? Not where you'd like it to live — where it actually lands.

WHAT YOU CAN'T FIND WHEN YOU NEED IT

Name one piece of information you regularly need that takes too long to locate, or that you often can't find at all.

CONTEXT THAT DROPS BETWEEN SESSIONS

When you return to a client after a gap — a few days, a week — what do you have to reconstruct from scratch? What doesn't carry forward automatically?

WHAT LIVES ONLY IN YOUR HEAD

What knowledge about how you work, how you read clients, or how you make decisions exists only inside your own head and hasn't been captured anywhere?

WHAT PLAUD IS CAPTURING VS. WHAT IT ISN'T

You're using Plaud to capture voice. What's getting recorded? What do you wish was also being captured that currently isn't?

OPEN QUESTIONS

The section with no wrong answers. Anything you've been sitting with — things you haven't figured out how to ask, things you want to know in thirty days that you don't know now.

WHAT YOU'RE NOT SURE HOW TO ASK

Is there something about your practice — how it runs, where it's going, what it needs — that you haven't been able to put into a clear question yet? Take a shot at it here.

WHAT YOU'D WANT TO KNOW IN 30 DAYS

If we're sixty days into this and you look back at today, what do you most want to have figured out by then?

WHAT YOU'VE BEEN AVOIDING

Is there a part of how your practice operates that you've been putting off thinking about? What is it?

WHAT YOU'D BUILD IF YOU KNEW IT WOULD WORK

If you knew the technical side was handled, what's the thing you'd want your practice to do that it can't do right now?
